 THE YOUNG SHUN FACEBOOK – BREAKING NEWS (NOT!) *****

by Fred Hoffman <wfh@langline.com>

I had to laugh recently when I saw an article online—and later appearing in the newspaper—breathlessly announcing that young folks are abandoning Facebook in greater and greater numbers. I scratched my head and thought, “Is this their idea of news?” I half expected to see an article on the same page about Vesuvius wiping out a town called Pompeii.

Anyone who’s been alive and in America during the last, oh, sixty years (at least) know that by the time adults discover a phenomenon, it has long since been adopted and then abandoned by the youth of America. I cringe every time I hear a reporter or a talking head on TV use an expression and add “as the kids say.” Count on it, by the time that happens, the kids have long since moved on to something else (and they’d be snickering at the old guy trying to be cool, except kids don’t watch TV any more, except via YouTube, Netflix, or Hulu).

I guess there was a time when the young discovered and liked Facebook, but that was eons ago in Youth Standard Time. They flocked to it for a brief while; then, like devouring locusts, moved on to fresh, unplundered territories. I asked one of my granddaughters the other day what social media she was on—I hadn’t heard of any of them. Now that I have, they’ll disappear soon. Only young people can deal with the pace at which this stuff pops up and disappears.

So let’s face it, Facebook is increasingly dominated by old farts. (I number myself among them, naturally.) That said, there’s a reason people who are, shall we say, mature, are finding Facebook interesting. Obviously, there’s no shortage of news—the fun part is figuring out which items are on the level and which were approved by dear old Vladimir Putin. There are also way too many glimpses into people’s lives that will only interest immediate family and friends. Some huge percentage of the posts I see are forgotten within two or three days, and rightly so.

But if you’re picky about where you go on Facebook, and you look closely, you’ll find a lot of good stuff going on. I know I’ve written about this before, but genealogy is flourishing on Facebook, and I’m seeing something I never thought I’d see. People are signing up, joining groups like Polish Genealogy, <<https://www.facebook.com/groups/50089808265/>>, posting their research problems—and getting answers, sometimes within minutes! It’s amazing how many members willingly read these posts, check digital archives and libraries they know about (of which newbies know nothing), and minutes later post links, saying “Here you can see your great-grandfather’s birth certificate.” And the amazing thing is, they’re usually right! There are some mistakes, but not as many as I would expect.

The process started earlier, with newsgroups and mailing lists. And they still can be really helpful. But there’s something about the immediacy of Facebook that blows me away. I honestly never thought I’d live to see a time when people with questions would get good answers so quickly.

And no, it doesn't make me long for the good old days when you had to suffer and persevere. I don't think misery creates character (although it may create characters). If people are willing and able to help and help quickly, good for them! Besides, we all know perfectly well that there's still a need for patience and discipline. There's a limit to how much help anyone can offer. But the great thing is that you have a real shot at receiving insights into your toughest questions, and often so quickly it boggles the mind. No guarantees, mind you; but there's a decent chance.

Actually, some folks are getting spoiled. Besides the Polish Genealogy group, I monitor the Genealogy Translations group <<https://www.facebook.com/groups/genealogytranslation/>>, and sometimes offer help with documents in German, Latin, Polish, and Russian. The group has actually been swamped lately with new members, and has had to change its rules so that members can only post one document a day. People are actually getting impatient if their document isn't translated within 24 hours! When folks gripe about the delay, I'm tempted to say, "Look, friend, even translators have lives, you know."

Another aspect of Facebook I didn't expect to see is the number of Poles who have joined, and the specialized Polish groups that have formed. Let me tell you, you're missing a bet if you don't check to see whether there's a group for your ancestral town or village! And if you're looking for people who can shed light on your surname, by all means, search the member list to see if there's a likely match. These days, you may very well find a Pole who bears the name you're seeking and may actually welcome a chance to share info with an American. If nothing else, it gives them a chance to practice their English (because they know Americans sure as hell aren't going to learn Polish!). Besides, these Poles are often proud of their home town and welcome a chance to tell others about its charms.

For the adventurous who actually do read a bit of Polish, there is also <<https://nk.pl/>>. The NK is short for Nasza Klasa, "our class," and it's designed to help Poles find and keep up with classmates. You can even log in via Facebook—in the home page, under "Logowanie," there's a big blue f and the option "Zaloguj się Facebookiem." (If you can't figure out what that means, don't even bother!). This is one more resource social media offers.

I'm not paid by Facebook to recruit members. I'm sure there will come a time when I'll say "Enough of this" and log off for good. But Gen Dobry! is all about online ways to help you connect with Polish ancestors, family, and friends. I figure I really ought to encourage you to try Facebook, if you have even half a notion to. You don't have to let it eat up your life, or reduce you to a slobbering addict. You can Facebook and live—you may even find some benefit in it.

 LETTERS TO THE EDITOR *****

Subject: Heirloom revisited.

Editor – You may recall a note in the November 2017 issue of Gen Dobry! about a gentleman named George Hawryluk who needed help returning an heirloom, a soup tureen, to relatives of its former owner. In the December 2017 issue, we included a note from Roger Laske, editor of the Polish Eaglet, explaining how he and the Polish Genealogical Society of Michigan had succeeded in tracking down two descendants. Not long after, Roger sent me another note with a link to an online article in the Detroit Free Press about the whole story. I meant to share it with you, but somehow overlooked it till now. Let me try to make amends by showing you Roger's note and the link to the story.

There is an article in today's edition of the Detroit Free Press, about an heirloom and how I helped find a descendant of Felix Lemke. The article mentions PGSM and me:

Roger Laske

Editor – This is just a good story all the way around. Thanks for sharing it with us, for helping George Hawryluk do a good deed, and for showing in general that genealogy can be useful as well as fascinating.

Camp Kosciuszko: The Polish Army at Niagara Camp, 1917-1919
November, 2017- November, 2018

An exhibition commemorating the 100th anniversary of the opening of Camp Kosciuszko, where thousands of soldiers of Polish descent trained before being shipped off to free Poland from 123 years of occupation.

Every community has a First World War story to tell. Most focus on the local soldiers who enlisted during the war and the impact that their absence may have had on the community. Niagara-on-the-Lake also has these stories to tell. However, 2017 marks the 100th anniversary of the opening of Kosciuszko Camp where thousands of soldiers of Polish descent, from the United States and parts of Canada, trained for several weeks prior to being shipped off to Europe to free Poland from 123 years of occupation. These soldiers lived in our community for several weeks, some were unable to speak English and others, during the sweep of the Influenza of 1918, never left, being buried at a special cemetery at St. Vincent de Paul church.

Who were these men? What was their life like here? How did they arrive? What did their training entail? What did they do during their leisure hours? How did the community respond to hosting these young men? We will attempt to answer these questions with this exhibition.

 HELP WITH SURNAMES *****

by Fred Hoffman <wfh@langline.com>

This seems to be a month when I'm mostly repeating things I've written about in the past. But that's not necessarily a bad thing. Subscribers come and go. Some of you probably weren't members when I talked about these things before.

Anyway, I had occasion to visit the forums on PolishOrigins.com recently, and I was reminded that they welcome questions about Polish surnames' origins. The PolishOrigins team, along with other participants in the forum, are quite comfortable receiving and answering questions in English, if you're wondering about that. There is no charge involved. You can visit the "Origins of surnames" at <<https://forum.polishorigins.com/viewforum.php?f=19>>.

Now, I've been answering similar questions for some 25 years now, first on the old Prodigy service, and more recently on PolishRoots. I still answer these questions when I have the time. But publications are eating up more and more of my time these days. Much as I enjoy researching and talking about names, I'm afraid there are times I just can't get to the requests sent in. I fall behind, and once that happens, it is a bear trying to catch up again!

So, I want to make sure you know about the help PolishOrigins offers. I've looked through a number of the posts on their forum, and they consult the same sources I do. I'm flattered that they sometimes even quote me! When possible, however, they get their answers from research works written by Polish scholars, and that's as it should be.

One big advantage to asking them, however, is that their researchers may be in a position to help you get hold of original sources in Poland—old records, works by local historians, that sort of thing. They are, after all, in Poland, and travel throughout the country frequently, leading research tours or helping clients. The truth is, they can get to sources to which I have no access.

While I'm on the subject, I should add that Robert Strybel, correspondent for the Polish American Journal and residing in Poland, offers to do custom-researched analysis of the meaning and origin of Polish surnames, for a fee. His ad in the PAJ reads as follows:

A custom-researched analysis of the meaning and origin of a Polish surname will make an unusual and memorable gift for a loved one (or yourself). It will explain the name's meaning, how it originated, how many people share it, where they are from and whether a noble coat of arms accompanies it. If one is found, its image and the story behind it will be provided.

If interested, kindly airmail a $19 personal or bank (cashier's) check or money order (adding $13 for each additional surname you wish to have researched) to Polonia's long-standing Warsaw correspondent and name researcher: Robert Strybel, ul. Kaniowska 24, 01-529 Warsaw, Poland.

You will also be able to check your family records in Poland, track down ancestral homesteads and graves or possibly even turn up long-lost relatives thanks to a helpful genealogical contact sheet included with each order. For more information please contact <research60@gmail.com>.

So you have two good choices: free analysis from PolishOrigins, or a paid analysis by Rob Strybel, whom I know to be a very knowledgeable person. To the best of my knowledge, both PolishOrigins and Rob are honest and reliable.

There was a time when I may have been the most convenient source of this kind of info available for most English speakers. I will still answer questions about name origins, as best I can. But it's only right to let you know you have other options these days—and they may be able to serve you better than I can.

 UPDATES ON RECORD INDEXES ***

by Waldemar Chorążewicz

Editor—In the lead article, I talk about good things you can find on Facebook. Among them are the lists Waldemar Chorążewicz periodically posts to the Polish Genealogy group <<https://www.facebook.com/groups/50089808265/>>, lists of recent indexes to Polish records. I mentioned them in the last issue, but I thought I'd repeat a few more, so that Waldemar's kindness reaches as many people as possible. A sampling of these lists may encourage you to look into the indexes; and I've learned that once Google scans issues of Gen Dobry!, results often show up Google searches, and may help people who don't even subscribe.

Speaker:* Ray Johnson

Location:* Arlington Heights Memorial Library • 500 N. Dunton Avenue • Arlington Heights, IL 60004

2 p.m. to 4 p.m.

This program at the library is open to the public. It will also be offered as a free Webinar to members. To defray costs, non-members will be charged a $10 fee. Mail-in registrations will not be accepted.

Topic Summary – The Circuit Court Archives are a great, often overlooked resource. This class concentrates on a very practical approach to on-site court research including, civil, law and chancery cases, divorces, wills and probates, county naturalizations, declarations of intentions, criminal cases, and burnt records.

Speaker’s Bio – Ray was born in Chicago and has been a life-long resident of the Chicagoland area. He is also a life-long enthusiast of Chicago history, legends, and folklore. He has been actively involved in genealogical research for over thirty years, with the last nine as a professional genealogist and lecturer. He is a former Chicago Area Chapter Representative and current member of the Association of Professional Genealogists.

He is a former gang/narcotics investigator and police instructor with the West Chicago Police Department in Du Page County. Upon leaving police work, he started his own historical and genealogical research company at <<http://www.historycop.com>> where he provides research services for other authors, television shows, researchers, attorneys, and family historians.

Ray is a Chicago history blogger on ChicagoNow (owned by the Chicago Tribune) under the name “Chicago History Cop”. He has published two books through Schiffer Publishing, Chicago’s Haunt Detective (2011) and Chicago History: The Stranger Side (2014). Both books look at the stranger side of Chicago history from an investigator and historian’s perspective.

He has taught classes in genealogical research for the LaGrange Park District, Lyons Township Adult Education and for Lyons Township High School Life Skills Classes. He was also a police instructor with the Northeast Multi Regional Training Corporation and taught classes at College of DuPage under the criminal justice curriculum.

In a recent blog entry for Eastman's Online Genealogy Newsletter [EOGN], Dick Eastman printed an announcement about a new service, RootsFinder, <<https://www.rootsfinder.com>>. Eastman commented, "I suspect this is going to be a major tool for all genealogists. The following announcement describes the latest project by several people, including Dallan Quass, a well-known software developer who has produced several excellent genealogy products in the past ... RootsFinder tries to be a great tree for supporting genealogy researchers at all levels, but especially new genealogy researchers. It also focuses heavily on pictures, stories, and videos to make things more interesting for a younger audience." Eastman strikes me as a pretty sharp fellow, and if he thinks this has potential to be a major tool for all genealogists, I figure it's surely worth mentioning to you.

In another EOGN blog entry, Eastman mentioned a company called Transcription Services that specializes in deciphering historical documents that most people find impossible to read. Eastman gave this link to an article in the Atlas Obscura by Sarah Laskow, in case you'd like to learn more. There is a fee for this service, of course, and I'm not sure how well this company would fare with languages other than English. Still, indecipherable documents are the bane of the genealogist's existence. It may be worthwhile to investigate a company that transcribes such documents.

Another Eastman entry included this link to an article by Alexandria Neason in the Columbia Journalism Review. The article is about Tom Tryniski, the man behind <<http://FultonHistory.com>>, a site with a collection of 27 million newspaper pages available to all at no charge. I'm sure we've mentioned this site before, but this is a resource researchers should be reminded of frequently, as its usefulness to you may be limited only by your ingenuity.

A recent issue of Genealogy News included a link to this article, which savvy computer users may want to read. I prefer to print complete URLs in Gen Dobry! precisely because seeing the link often gives you a notion where you're going if you click on it. It's just one more way to protect yourself online. The problem is, long links often get broken or rendered invalid. Shortened URLs serve a useful purpose because they're more likely to remain intact. Unfortunately, looking at them tells you nothing about where you're going if you click on them. This article discusses ways you can preview such links so you're not clicking blindly and hoping for the best.

Recent additions to this site include a long list of address and business directories for Germany for the 1800s and 1900s; similar directories for Königsberg, East Prussia through much of the second half of the 19th century; similar directories for Danzig (Gdańsk) and Köslin (Koszalin) through much of the 1800s and early 1900s; plus Silesia Agricultural Directories for 1886, 1894, 1898, 1902, 1909, 1917, and 1937. I have sometimes found information on families by simply entering the name and any other relevant info, then just searching the site.

In a note posted to the Lithuanian Genealogy newsgroup, Benjamin Kman mentioned discovering this site, devoted to ethnic Germans in the Suwałki area. This is not the easiest area in the world to find information on, so I thought I should mention it.
